I wish to express my deepest gratitude to Dr. Yvonne Broom of Wits University for the dedicated support and encouragement as supervisor, especially at the most difficult period of writing up the present research. Dr. Yvonne Broom also assisted with the quantitative analysis of data in Chapter 3.

I am also grateful to Prof. Anna Stetsenko of City University of New York, for the crucial support and encouragement, and the critical comments and feedback on my earlier drafts. These have been instrumental in building my confidence with my, then, fledgling ideas.

Thanks to Prof. Ian Moll of Wits School of Education, my teacher and mentor who provided me with useful comments on my earlier drafts.

Thanks to Prof. Shirley Pendlebury of the University of Cape Town, for the encouraging words over the years as head of the School of Education at Wits.

I am also indebted to Joan Hardman of University of Cape Town, my selfless colleague and friend who, under extreme pressure and at short notice offered to proofread the final draft of the thesis and provided invaluable comments.

I also wish to thank the following organizations for their support: Mellon Foundation Scholarship; University of the Witwatersrand staff bursary and time our sabbatical programme; Council of Education, Witwatersrand: Witmore Richards Bursary and National Research Fund.

The support and encouragement that I received from all of these teachers, mentors and friends has undoubtedly contributed to the successful completion of the present study. However, the ideas advanced in the present study are entirely mine and are not necessarily shared by any of the persons and organizations mentioned above.
